HISTORY of STATION 66

Welcome to Station 66—a place with an amazing family history, stretching back five generations!

In the 1930s, Claud and Celia Adams, Curt's great-great grandparents, built and opened it as a gas station. A few years later, they began offering hardware, cookware, and other sundries. His grandmother, Martha Adams, worked there as a young woman, which is where she met her future husband, Calvin Tramel—while he was pumping gas! In the 1940s during the War, the gas station became something of a community center when Claud decided to show movies on the side of the building. The store thrived for many years until 1959, when it was forced to shut down as M-66 was built and M-78 closed. The building stood vacant for almost 50 years.

Even as a boy, Curt would sometimes wander around the empty store, thinking it should be re-opened in some form, dreaming of opening his own store. But by the early 2000s, the structure had fallen into disrepair. In 2004, his father was faced with the difficult decision: make improvements or tear it down—it was no longer insurable.

He thought about razing the building, but reconsidered. Besides, Curt told him, he might want to do something with it someday. A few years later, Curt began talking to his family and friends about re-opening the old station. More than a few people were skeptical that an ice cream shop on a minor state highway could succeed—plus there was no indoor plumbing and the whole building would need to be rewired.

But in 2009, Curt stepped away from his job as an electrician and focused on bringing the station back to life. The original plan was to have an ice cream parlor, local produce, and Michigan-made grocery items. And more than anything, they wanted a place where the community could gather. Renovations began.

By June 2010, they were ready to open their doors. In July, they added hot dogs to the menu and then in 2011 (after much trial and error) fresh doughnuts. That year, they held their first free outdoor concert—drawing over 400 people—and first car show, featuring 80 classic cars from the Battle Creek area.

As the store's popularity grew, Curt realized he couldn't continue alone. So his wife, Janette, who had been working in the summer already, resigned from her teaching job and came to work full time at Station 66 in 2012. With Janette now managing staff and bringing new ideas, things really began to take off. They began to expand their food offerings with one simple rule: make the best food they can with the best locally-sourced ingredients.

In 2016, they added a diner-style bar featuring salvaged (and restored) vintage stools from a 1930s dime store in northern Michigan and, much to the delight of many, a 1952 Seeburg Select-O-Matic jukebox. By then, they had added several new food items that were proving as popular as the ice cream and doughnuts. With demand for hot food and more bakery items growing, they added an auxiliary building (in the same style as the original) in 2017, giving the kitchen staff some much-needed space!

Today, the station provides so much more than 64,619 ice cream cones a year to the community—families make memories here. Their car shows feature over 200 classic cars from owners all around West Michigan and their free concerts have drawn up to 1,000 people per show. Since 2013, children look forward to enjoying Friendly Forest Hayrides every fall. Their ever-expanding food menu brings people from miles around for quality cooking, made the way they remember when they were growing up.

Perhaps more than anything—more than the awards and more than the success of the store—Curt and Janette love that they have done what they had hoped for: they have created a place for the community to gather.
